For instance, Nike Air Max is one of the newest models and it really differs from Nike Air Jordan, although this is the same brand, and we're not talking about the difference in gender, we're talking about concept. If you're a running person, you can run in Nike sneakers for hours on and on. Of course there are models that are only meant for football, or soccer, but Nike is famous for its almost casual footwear, though remaining sport-aimed. Adidas sneakers seem to be better for "conservators". They don't really change nor in design, not in concept. Nowadays, Adidas is more focused on sports wear, rather than sports footwear.

Reebok shoes are Columbia Coats Mens comfy and well, their design is decent enough to wear them on casual basis. They're comfortable for running and playing sports, same as Adidas, but they would probably be more popular due to their closeness to the casual footwear. For instance, if you wear them on a date you won't seem like you were on the basketball training and forgot to take your casual shoes with you. Thinking of all of the above said, we really come to the conclusion that each person chooses his own preferable product, either it's <http://www.choisgarden.com/images/large/columbia-coats-018sfu.jpg> conservative Adidas or Reebok shoes, or more liberal Nike sneakers.
